The Dutch Tradition Giving Chocolate Letters

The tradition of making chocolate letters on Saint Nicholas Eve (6th December) dates back hundreds of years in The Netherlands. Before gift-wrapping presents became popular, parents would spread a bed sheet over each child's pile of gifts for 'Sinterklaas'. Letters were originally made from dough/bread. The edible letter of each child's first initial was placed on top of their respective pile of presents so each child knew which belonged to them.

At the beginning of the 20th century, the Dutch chocolate industry began to make letters out of chocolate. Around this time, chocolate letters quickly replaced those made of pastry, much to the delight of the children.

It has become tradition that Opa (grandpa) and Oma (grandma) would give a personalised chocolate letter to each grandchild. Children whose name started with M or a W always got more chocolate than a child whose name started with L, which would have resulted in many arguments during Sinterklaas.
